Interesting Doings in the Fabulous Hamptons This Past Week

By Dan Rattiner

So, for all you city folks, here's the news of the Hamptons this week.

At about 11 p.m. last Saturday night, two horses and three goats were seen by a passing motorist clip clopping along on the side of Montauk Highway near the Laundry Restaurant at the corner of Spring Close Highway in East Hampton. The motorist, Chris Chapin, dialed 911 on his cell phone, and pretty soon the police showed up and tried to round them up as best they could. The herd seemed to be following the lead of a small pony, who seemed very disinclined to be rounded up at that hour.

At one point, the police had the highway shut down in both directions. At another point, there were five police cars and a bunch of floodlights lighting things up. People in the area who came out to see what was going on were of the opinion that the fivesome were probably among the residents of the nearby Spring Close Farm.

The owners of the farm, which is north of the railroad tracks on Spring Close Highway, were called about the goings on just after midnight. The call roused them out of bed.

"The latch must have come open on the gate," Pam Glennon said. "We never got dressed so fast."

She and her husband rushed to the scene.

Finally, at about 12:30, the five animals went behind the restaurant and seemed to think that nobody would see them there. The Glennons lured the pony out with carrots, and the other horse and the three goats came along. By this time, the Glennons, who had armed themselves with bridles, bits and ropes, lassoed the animals and led them back home.

Up on the North Fork for the past few weeks, there has been an occasional appearance of what witnesses say is a mountain lion. He was first seen in mid-October in the backyard of a home on Waterview Drive in Southold, by a woman named Marissa Romeo. Romeo didn't say any-because he didn't want people to think he was out for publicity for his store or something. He said the creature was definitely a very large cat, light tan, about five feet long with a swishy tail that went on for about a foot and a half beyond that.

Police asked if he was sure it was a mountain lion and he said he was a hunter and, though he had never encountered a mountain lion, he had seen pictures of them.

"This was one," he said. "I know what I saw."

The police contacted Gillian Wood-Pultz, who runs the North Fork Animal Welfare League Shelter, who set a trap for it in a wooded section of property near Goose Creek, but so far it has not caught any mountain lion.

"It's captured a couple of raccoons," said Denise, who is John's wife.

"The trap is not large enough for what I saw," said John.

But Wood-Pultz said that she used the biggest trap that she had.

In answer to repeated questions from people in the community, the police in Southold have distributed an advisory, which tells you to call them if you see the lion, and whatever you do if you see it, do not run away from it.

"A big cat like that loves a chase," the advisory says. "Just stand there facing the lion if you see him, and raise your arms high over your head so you look bigger. If the lion does not leave immediately, talk to him in a way that you would talk to a house cat. If it becomes aggressive, throw thing to anybody about it at the time because she thought nobody would believe her. But the next day, she saw the mountain lion around dinner-time basking in the sun in a neighbor's driveway. It was quite nearby to a deer, but paid little attention to it.

Romeo called the police, but by the time she got back from the phone, the lion was gone.

The mountain lion was next seen on Waterview Drive south of Goose Creek by the owner of a store in Greenport who asked reporters that they use only his first name, John,

TWENTYSOMETHING... By DAVID LION RATTINER

In addition to the stock market, I've discovered other reasons why a lot of people in the Hamptons are ticked off about the economy. A lot of us out there are just regular folk who happened to buy a house on the East End years ago because we really liked the area, and suddenly ended up owning a house in "The Hamptons." Some people call that group "locals," others call them "Bonackers," although that really refers to a group that's been here 350 years. I like to call them regular, hardworking people who like it here and just happen to have homes now worth millions.

The other day, getting a cup of coffee at the Bridgehampton Market, I eavesdropped on a conversation between two women that went something like this. "I'm pretty sure that my house is worth 3.3 million, but now because of the economy, it is only worth about 2.8 and it is really scaring me."

The other woman asked her, "Do you plan on selling you home?"

"Oh no. Of course not," she said. They paid and left. Yep, that pretty much sums it up, we are all pissed off.

I'm a little pissed off too. Although I don't really want to sell, I've had my oceanfront trailer for sale in Montauk (at a discounted price I might add) because I want to move closer to work in Bridgehampton. And thanks to the economy, I'm having a hard time selling it. Why oh why must I live on the ocean in Montauk? What a tragedy!

We have a lot to complain about for having homes on the East End during this economic downturn. What a mistake it was to have bought a sensational house minutes from the greatest beaches in the world, two hours from Manhattan and easily rentable in the summer time should you feel like making a quick 10K, 20K, 30K, 100K.

I'm upset, dag nabit. I'm really upset.

Why oh why must we have to wait for the economy to come around while living in arguably the most beautiful place in America? We have to wait for the turnaround and watch all of the people who bought during these times enjoy their wise investments and only then will we feel better about ours.

Really? The truth is that there are many people out there who are not losing equity in their homes and never will because they love them and will never sell. That is the big secret that original settlers and long time homeowners seem to get. They bought land out here because they loved it out here and they keep their land out here because they love it out here and they will continue to keep it because they still love it out here.

If you're frustrated because you want to sell your home but can't get the price you want for it, just look around for a second. It will put your mind at ease.

rocks or sticks at it. Mountain lions rarely attack humans."

The chief of the Southold Town Police said that in the event the mountain lion is again seen, they will respond by inviting a veterinarian from the Sears-Bellows Wildlife Center in Hampton Bays to come and shoot it with a tranquilizer gun.

"We will not kill it unless it attacks a human," said Cochran.

By the time the Wildlife people get there,

John said, the mountain lion will be long gone.

Mountain lions, which are not native to this area, grow to about 140 pounds, can be as long as seven feet (not including the tail), can leap 15 feet up off the ground and 40 feet sideways. They can run 45 miles an hour.

Mountain lions feed on deer and other large animals, of which there are plenty here on the East End, so it's possible that mountain lions could survive quite well here.

Mountain lions hunt mostly at night and sleep during the day. They can emit growls, purrs, chirps, peeps, whistles and screams.

Mountain lions often take their prey up a tree, where they hang it on branches to sort of, well, season it. They will come back to feed on it from time to time, and will defend the tree from others.

So, if you see a deer up a tree, just keep walking.

Finally, in Sagaponack, work is underway to renovate the old barn at 3175 Montauk Highway, which is scheduled to be recreated as the Sagaponack Village Hall.

In beginning the work, however, workmen have found the building to be infested with rats. Following an odd smell and then tearing some boards out of a wall, they uncovered the nest, which is made of a collection of old scraps and pieces of fuzz and cotton collected from around the area. The nest was filled with the remains of food that apparently came from a compost pile. The rats were having a fine old time. The bits and pieces of food included lobster, clams, ribs and fish bones. There was also the fully preserved carcass of a dead mouse in the wall.

All of this is being removed. And the workmen promise that the Village Hall will be totally free of rats, the non-human kind, when it opens for business next summer.

Men & Women Achieve Equality Where It's Never Talked About

By Dan Rattiner

Last Saturday morning at about 10 a.m., I was in the ladies room that is just next to the counter at Danny's Poxabogue Café in Sagaponack. Danny's is a very popular place for breakfast on the weekends and this Saturday was no exception.

I was in there for a while when I heard somebody rattling on the door. This is always a disconcerting experience. I had locked it behind me. I hoped it would hold. I didn't want some stranger walking in on me. It held.

A minute or two later, the rattling of the door came again. And this time, I did what I always do under those circumstances. I said in the deepest, most powerful voice I could muster, "I'm in here!!" They might be big men, but I was bigger. They should get the hell away from there until I came out.

After I did this, I had second thoughts. I am, after all, a man. The men's room was in use and the ladies' room wasn't. So I was using the ladies'. Whoever was out there, chances were, was female. I thought — maybe I should have spoken in a high squeaky voice. That might have been better.

A few minutes later, I washed up, opened the door and looked directly into the astonished eyes of a slender woman of about 50, who could not have been more than five foot one. I marched off taking big steps.

It has occurred to me that bathrooms in public places have undergone a cosmic shift in recent years, a shift that has largely gone unnoticed. I hereby notice it.

I was an undergraduate English major in the early '60s, and, for my senior thesis, I did a 60-page study on the meaning of the graffiti posted on bathroom walls. It was limited, back then, to the graffiti on the bathroom walls of men's rooms of course. I had never been in a ladies' bathroom and I saw no prospect of ever being in one.

I had seen ladies' rooms in the movies of course. They were fabulous places, all tidy and

A MURDER IN PATCHOGUE REVERBERATES HERE

By Dan Rattiner

Last Saturday night, seven high school kids at a party in Medford told friends they were going out to "get a Mexican," something that friends of these kids say is a sort of thing some of them do in that community on a Saturday night. It means beat up an illegal alien. In this case, however, these teenagers went out, cornered two "Mexicans" in a parking lot near the Patchogue Railroad Station, and then, while the others watched, one of them killed one of the men with a knife.

The man who died was Marcello Lucero, 38, a day laborer who had lived in the community for 16 years and sent the money he makes to his mother in Ecuador. He was stabbed in the chest by Jeffrey Conroy, a senior at Patchogue-Medford High School, who is on both the wrestling team and the lacrosse team, and, until now, expected to be college bound with an athletic scholarship. The others cheered him on while he did it.

Lucero was not alone when he was killed. Also surrounded was his younger brother, Joselo Lucero, also an illegal, who slipped away when Marcelo was attacked, then immediately called 911, so that the police could quickly arrive to arrest this crew, which they did.

Hate crime does not rise to murder in cold blood very often, and so the coverage of this event — which took place just a 45 minute drive away from the Hamptons — appeared on the front page of The New York Times, on Fox News, CNN, the BBC, The International Herald Tribune and newspapers and television stations around the world.

The first comment made about this murder, by Steve Levy, who is the Suffolk County supervisor, was that "This would have been a one-day story if it had happened in Nassau County rather than in Suffolk County." The comment was entirely devoid of concern for the family of the victim, and seemed to suggest that a heightened reaction by the media to this event was an unfair attack on his own particular illegal immigrant policy. Levy has, indeed, created a wide range of new laws in the County which are aimed at preventing illegal Hispanics from finding work, congregating anywhere in public or even staying here. He condones midnight raids and anything else necessary to get them either out of this area, or deported out of the country and back to where they came from. Without any humanitarian side to his new laws, many in the media believe these laws might encourage violent acts by white supremacists and others of their stripe.

In recent years, this newspaper has been a strong proponent of a group that wants to cede eastern Long Island from Suffolk County in order to start our own county.

One of the reasons many of us have felt we ought to break away is because of the largely intolerant attitudes in Suffolk County, particularly the southwest end of it.

If you look at the history of hate crimes and intolerance on Long Island, you notice a very unusual confluence of them in the southwestern part of the Island. Over the years, there has been nothing like it in Nassau County to the west or our East End, and that is a fact.

In the 1920s, the Ku Klux Klan was based in the southwestern part of Suffolk County, holding its biggest rallies in Sayville and East Islip.

In the late 1930s, there was a camp called "Camp Siegfried," located in Yaphank — where the Brookhaven Lab is today — that held torchlight and uniformed Nazi rallies demanding death to the Jews in America and world conquest for the Master Race. Camp Siegfried went on for three years, from 1936 to 1939, without county interference. Some of these rallies were attended by 20,000 people. The Nazis even marched through downtown Patchogue, with County approval.

In recent years, there have been more attacks and hate crimes in this community of towns, which include Holbrook, Farmingville, Ronkonkoma, Medford, Patchogue, Sayville and East Islip.

In 2001, two Mexican day laborers were trapped and beaten, nearly to death, in Farmingville. In 2003, a home owned by a Mexican family was burned to the ground in Farmingville. Just three weeks ago there were more than 100 leaflets placed on the windshield wipers of vehicles parked at the Deer Park Railroad Station, urging people to join the KKK. They were placed there by the Northern and Southern Knights of the Ku Klux Klan.

Some of this may help explain the unbelievable just-for-fun hobby of some of the local high school kids, which is to go out and beat up people who will not fight back because they fear the police will bring them to the attention of immigration. There is an apparent belief by some of the teenagers in the community that this sort of behavior is okay.

Levy, who himself grew up and attended high school in the southwestern part of Suffolk County — he went to Sachem High School — might do well to look at his initial knee jerk reaction to this shocking crime. The undercurrent of intolerance there goes back generations.

Of course, the southwestern part of the county is only a small part of the whole county. When horrified reactions barreled in from everywhere else in the county about his comment, he did a whole 360. He is not a bigot. He is currently espousing a five-point plan to right himself. He is seeking donations for the victim's family; he is asking religious leaders to preach the need for tolerance; he's called for schools to consider using the services of the Anti-Bias Task Force; he's going to display the county's anonymous 800-220-TIPS phone number more prominently; and he's created a Hispanic liaison to the county police department.

What he has not yet done, however, is say he will readdress and possibly repeal the anti-Hispanic laws that his administration has passed in the last three years and that we in other parts of the county continue to live with.

As for how this specific crime has been dealt with, consider this. As things stand now, the killer, who said he was going out to get a Mexican and then once out bragged to the other seven with him that he would not only "get" but also kill one and then did — is charged not with murder in the first degree by the County, but with manslaughter. Really.

To paraphrase Harry Golden, who said "Only in America," I would add "Only in southwestern Suffolk County."

Southampton Saves Open Space, Then Lets It Be Developed?

By Dan Rattiner

A hearing held last Thursday in Southampton seems to have highlighted an open space preservation program that has gone slightly berserk.

A developer has bought 13 acres of open space that has already been preserved as farmland, and is proposing to put what appears to be a garden center on it. It is on Ocean Road in Bridgehampton, just north of the corner of Bridge Lane, and the land is not zoned for retail business.

And yet, the developer of the land — there is no other adequate way to describe who is doing this — wants to make it into a garden center.

And it seems to be perfectly legal with the relaxed new rules that the Town has adopted involving agricultural uses of open space.

In the old days, land and open space were preserved — absent the purchase of it — by two methods.

One was for the Town or County to buy the development rights. A large farm would be threatened with development because it was being taxed as developable land and the farmer was not making enough to pay the real estate or inheritance taxes. So the Town would buy the “development rights,” thus reducing the value of the land that remained, since it could only be used for agricultural purposes.

The taxes would now be affordable. And the farmer would pocket a windfall.

The other way, especially in the case of land that was not fertile enough to be properly farmed, was to allow it to be developed, but with the homes on it clustered to one side, with a large part of it left open as a nature preserve. Nothing could be built in a preserve. It would just remain wild and unused.

The Town of Southampton, however, unlike East Hampton, has gotten it into its head to promote active farming by allowing the owners of this preserved land to do farming activities on it. Unlike “preserved” land, where the gen-

SAG BRIDGE DEDICATED TO 19-YEAR OLD MARINE

By Debbie Tuma

Growing up in the tiny village of Sag Harbor, Jordan Haerter used to sit by the Sag Harbor/North Haven Bridge, near the wharf, and think about a future in the military.

In a sad, ironic twist last Saturday morning, that very bridge was renamed the “Lance Corporal Jordan Haerter Veterans Memorial Bridge,” as a permanent memorial to this local marine. Haerter was killed in the line of duty in Iraq last April, at the age of 19.

Hundreds of people lined the flag-draped bridge, and the Main Street behind, for a ribbon-cutting ceremony by state officials who unanimously passed a bill (co-sponsored by Senator Ken LaValle and NYS Assemblyman Fred Thiele) to change its name in Haerter’s honor. “Although renaming this bridge will never fill the hole in the hearts of Jordan’s family, at least they know that his act of heroism will never be forgotten,” said Thiele.

A U.S. Marine helicopter hovered overhead, as 40 of Haerter’s 1st Battalion, 9th Marine comrades, also known as “The Walking Dead,” stood at attention, in uniform, in Haerter’s honor.

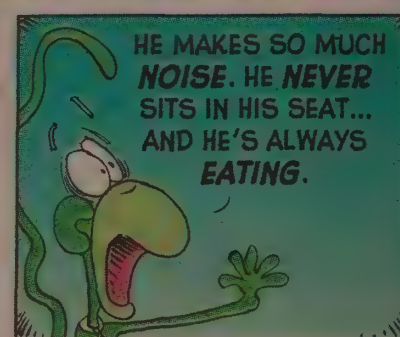

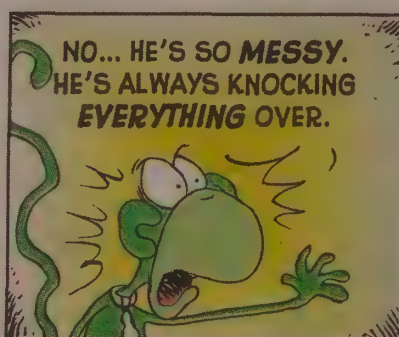

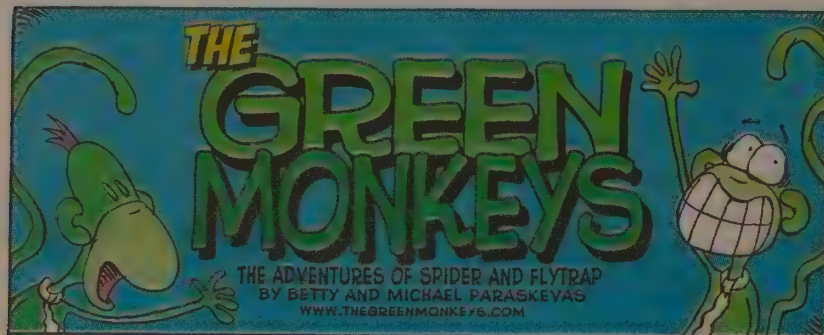

“We flew here from all over the country to pay tribute to our friend Jordan, who risked his life to save us,” said Joshua Pitts, of the 1st Battalion, 9th Marines, who came from his home in Oakdale, Tennessee. “We wouldn’t be here without him.”

Moments earlier, Haerter’s Commander, Lt. Colonel Brett Bourne, had explained to the crowd that on April 22, 2008, Haerter and another marine from the 2nd Battalion, 8th Marines had been guarding an entry gate of their unit’s compound in Ramadi, Iraq, when a large truck accelerated toward them without stopping. They opened fire, until the 2,000-pound blast claimed their lives.

Montauk is the Setting for Star-Studded, Big Time Film

By David Lion Rattiner

What do Pulp Fiction, Ditch Plains, Puff and Putt and The Montauk Pioneer all have in common? They come together in the new Hollywood film, Paper Man, featuring star actors Ryan Reynolds (Vanwild, Blade, Trinity) Lisa Kudrow ("Friends") Emma Stone (Superbad) and Jeff Daniels (Dumb and Dumber).

Last week, production on Paper Man was in full force, with the cast and crew working every day on location in Montauk. It was a surreal moment to see Puff and Putt, Montauk's old-school miniature golf and family fun center open only in the summertime, awash with $10,000 cameras, elaborate lighting, A-list actors, craft tables, trucks, wires and of course, a director yelling "Action!"

Paper Man is the story of a failed novelist (played by Jeff Daniels) who goes to Montauk and develops an unlikely friendship with a teenage girl, played by Emma Stone. I headed down to the set after receiving an e-mail asking for permission to include The Montauk Pioneer in the film. After getting the go ahead from publisher Kathy Rae, I raced to Montauk to get the scoop. On the set I was introduced to directors Kieran Mulroney and Michele Mulroney — the husband/wife team who wrote and are co-directing Paper Man. Approaching a crew member wearing a heavy winter jacket and winter hat, I asked, "How do you feel about shooting this movie in Montauk?"

"I absolutely love Montauk. It is so peaceful here and the town is adorable. From a shooting perspective, we are able to get a lot done," he said as he ran off onto the set.

On the set, a scene was being shot with Emma Stone, who happily signed a few autographs for some teenage fans that were walking by Puff and Putt. Richard N. Gladstein, one of the film's producers, graciously allowed a few photos of the film crew in action. Gladstein has also been a producer on blockbuster films including The Bourne Identity, The Cider House Rules, Pulp Fiction, and Reservoir Dogs.

At one point, Jeff Daniels was climbing into a black Mercedes Benz for a driving sequence. A camera was mounted to the side of the car. "That equipment looks really expensive. What's that camera rig cost, ten grand?" I asked Gladstein. He turned to me and gave me look that said something like, "What are you kidding?" then answered, "You just have to make sure that nothing goes wrong."

Almost on cue, a crewmember began yelling

MONTAUK PLAN: JUST STOP THE OCEAN, PLEASE

By T.J. Clemente

The timing — as timing seems to be lately — was most curious. As the Town of East Hampton is struggling to get its financial house in order, the Town's Planning Board was in Montauk seeking input on what that village can do to make things better, particularly in the business area.

The Montauk locals slowly arrived the evening of Thursday, Nov. 13 to the Montauk Fire House to complete a sort of "open house" for ideas. Under the direction of East Hampton Town Planning Director Marguerite Wolffsohn the meeting, attended by many members of the health, engineering and Town Planning departments (including Town Engineer Thomas D. Talmage) was called to order.

The number one concern of all who showed up was beach erosion, or as one fellow repeated, "If we don't do anything, one storm will come by and wipe out the downtown, making the rest of these plans irrelevant." The quagmire is that the ocean, which made all who own businesses in Montauk successful, is also the looming threat to the livelihood of those same people.

Huddled around the table labeled "Recreation Parks and Drainage," the residents seemed to be led by John Keeshan, Montauk's Chamber of Commerce 2008 Person of the Year. The soft spoken, well-informed Keeshan was direct and poignant, and Wolffsohn expressed that she heard what was being said. Everyone at the table realized that the cost of any plan to restrain the ocean — like getting more sand, having sand bags readily available, building necessary structures — flew in the face of the fact the town finances are already stretched. But the thought that even a severe Nor'easter could cause severe damage to the Town of Montauk as we know it was sobering. Lorraine Creegan, Director of the Montauk Chamber of Commerce, was all over

"Stop the car!" as it drove off onto a pebble driveway. There was a big fuss as several other crewmembers ran toward the car, which was now stopped on the pebbles. This was apparently a danger to the equipment, probably because there was fear a rock would shoot up and damage the camera. Slowly the driver backed out of the driveway and then took an alternate route onto Montauk Highway.

While Daniels was out shooting with the Mercedes, Stone was doing another scene. With nearly 100 cast members and crew standing around, holding microphones and setting up props at the Puff and Putt, director Michele Mulrone shouted, "Quiet on the set!" And it was.

As I headed back to my car, Ryan Reynolds was standing in the middle of the road, right by the Runaways restaurant where many of the trucks and equipment for the movie were parked. He was about 100 yards or so away from the Puff and Putt. Reynolds is very tall — easily 6' 4" — and he was eying the Puff and Putt set from a distance. After about two minutes of standing in the street, a black Lincoln Navigator pulled up and picked him up, then transported him to the Puff and Putt. While this type of protocol is normally required to protect famous actors from rabid fans, during the slow season in Montauk it looked a bit silly — even to the actor, who laughed and shook his head as he got in the truck to travel a few hundred feet.

Paper Man will hit the theaters in 2009. Keep your eye out for the Pioneer's film debut.

Montauk Plan

this issue saying something must be done soon.

At the "Parking, Alleys and Public Transportation" table, Principal Planner Tara Powers listened to ideas to increase beach parking legally in town, as well as perhaps adding a beach shuttle for a simple reason: more legal parking means more visitors in town longer. At the "Sidewalks and Traffic" station, Assistant Planning Director Jo Anne Pahwul said the issues discussed were "free parking at Nick's Beach and perhaps a small beach boardwalk there."

With Eric Schantz from the Town Heath Department and Director of Housing Tom Ruhle manning the "Motels, Housing and Business" station, the issues were affordable housing for seasonal workers and year round employees, as well as the difficulty in completing timely renovations on old buildings. At the "Design and Architecture" station, Maureen Ryan of the Planning Department stressed the integrity of the town's appearance, hoping to foster more of the Carl Fisher Era look for downtown. Ideas were discussed about future building proposals to limit to the creative process within the borders of good taste and legality.

Even though the ocean, storms and erosion were the big topics, the meeting elicited suggestions on other areas and allowed East Hampton Town government and Montauk hamlet residents to communicate about Montauk's needs, ills and future. Wolffsohn stressed that this sort of meeting was to be held in all the hamlets of the Town of East Hampton. Her report may help procure grants and support decisions made by the Town Board. Wolffsohn said that ideas and recommendations from all the hamlets would be discussed at a meeting of the Planning Board and a document would be drafted. Before being finalized, that document would be presented to residents for public discussion. At the end of the meeting, Wolffsohn said, "I was happy with the turnout. We got lots of great comments and now we will list the priorities, and come back with the draft resolutions."

T.J. Clemente

The town staff worked tirelessly to answer every question. They listened to all suggestions and made notes throughout the evening. It was the best of town democracy at work — an example of small town America's ability to participate in decisions and make a difference.

When the meeting ended, I realized this was perhaps the most civil of all the Town Meetings I've covered in recent memory, perhaps because those in attendance were concerned forward thinkers who came together to find solutions.

Non-Musical Works of Art by Rock & Rollers

An upcoming show at Duck Walk Vineyards, November 21-23, proves Neil Young to be on the money when he sings, "Hey hey, my my. Rock and roll will never die." While Young was talking about works of music, the show at Duck Walk will feature works of art: It's a visual history of rock and roll where every work is up for sale, making it possible to take home a little piece of that history with you.

The show features about 150 original artworks created by musicians including Paul McCartney, John Entwistle, Jerry Garcia and more, as well as rare lithographs, concert posters, photographs, gold records, animation art, handwritten lyrics and other memorabilia.

ny and turned the Rock Art Show into a nationally touring show. This is the third time the show has come to Duck Walk and the East End.

Since people can purchase the artwork and memorabilia, the show is constantly changing. For example, Ron Campbell, who directed and animated The Beatles cartoon series and Yellow Submarine, creates new artwork based on that ani-

Prices can range from $10 to $5,000. "There's really something for everyone," said Scott Segelbaum, who founded the art show in Los Angeles in 1992. "It's just one of those things where you walk into the room, look around and think, 'Wow, this is really cool.' It's a visual montage of rock history and it just draws you that much closer to your favorite artist."

He added, "We make sure we appeal to all price ranges, to all music fans, not just serious collectors. It's something people can get excited about." Those who come to the show will also be able to read about the history of each piece. Segelbaum, who is passionate about the show and the music it represents, will be on hand to give even more detailed info about each piece. And, he says, the show represents all genres of music, from the Rat Pack to the Red Hot Chili Peppers, with a heavy dose of classic rock acts like The Who, Led Zeppelin, The Grateful Dead.

Segelbaum started the show when he was working at a radio station in the L.A. area, as a one-time charity event. "Ron Woods and Jerry Garcia had just put out art pieces," he said. "It was interesting that all these rock and rollers were putting out art. I mean, it makes sense they're using their creativity in other respects." With the success of that event, attended by well known musicians such as Elton John, Stevie Nicks and Brian Wilson, he thought the idea had the potential to be expanded.

Segelbaum brought the show to the east coast in 1999, when he moved to Philadelphia. Then, in 2004, he created a production compa-

How To Avoid The Nightmares Of Home Renovation

By Wendy Miller

With so much confusion about how and where to start, the thought of renovating our home was daunting.

When we first started thinking about a 3 story addition to the rear of our home, my husband John and I were both deeply concerned about the renovation nightmare stories that we had heard so often.

So instead going through the time and trouble of having all this work done to our house, we spent the better part of two years searching for a home to buy that already had all, or at least most of what we were looking for. Our realtor, bless her heart, showed John and I 64 houses in those two years. I know the exact number because I kept an ongoing log of each house that we toured. I kept notes on what we liked and disliked about every one of them.

Even with all this effort, we never found the right house. It came to the point at about this time last year, where we had gotten really desperate to do something. So we started to look more closely at the renovation option.

OUR NEW HOME!

The pre-planning process we followed eliminated surprises during construction.

Eager to get the ball rolling, John and I made appointments to meet two architects and one renovation contractor. While we felt unsure about what we were supposed to do, it gave us some confidence knowing that each of the people we were meeting with had come recommended. Both of the architects that we met, suggested that we get things started by engaging their services to prepare preliminary drawings. From there, John and I would be able to get estimates from remodeling contractors on how much the work would cost.

That advice sounded ok, and we were ready to hand over a $7,900 retainer to one of the architects, until the contractor we met with let it slip that we were, as he put it, "living in dream land" if we thought that we could find a reputable contractor that would get the work done for anywhere close to our $230,000 budget. He was very upfront in telling John and I that we would be lucky to have the work done for less than $420,000. He also said that we would be wasting our money if we proceeded with the drawings at this point.

Unsure of what to do and no closer to an answer than before, we put things on hold! Everything about how to get started, who to trust and what direction to take was completely overwhelming.

Then one day, a close friend of mine emailed me with a link to a website geared to homeowners that are thinking about undertaking a major home renovation project. I immediately registered at the site to receive their free Booklet "The 5 Most Common And Costly Mistakes Homeowners Make When Renovating".

This was exactly the information that John and I had been looking for!

As "first timers", we really had no idea of what we should be doing. The booklet gave us a step by step guide to working with architects, designers and contractors on our large scale renovation.

The reality that our mistakes could potentially cost us thousands unnecessarily was bothersome. We learned all about the common and costly mistakes to avoid so that our project would come in on budget.

While we were cost conscious, John and I were not prepared to skimp on quality. We discovered that we did not have to over pay to get access to the top quality trades and suppliers.

We are very fortunate that we learned about this Booklet when we did. It saved us so much time, money and stress in our renovation project. And here we are now, 49 weeks later, living in our newly renovated home. It's exactly the home that I always wanted.

MY NEW KITCHEN

The new kitchen brings order to my busy family's life. Truly a joy to live in.

SPA BATHROOM!

By learning how to control our budget, we found the money to build an incredible ensuite spa bathroom!

Sag Bridge (continued from page 19)

"If they hadn't stopped this suicide bomber truck, it could have exploded inside the compound, killing 33 Marines and 21 Iraqi police inside," he said. "These two men fearlessly gave their lives in self defense."

Haerter was posthumously awarded the Purple Heart Medal, Combat Action Ribbon, the Iraqi Campaign Medal, Iraqi Service Medal, Good Conduct Medal, and National Defense Medal.

On Saturday, the crowds and numerous officials braved the pouring rain, huddling under tents to hear tributes. The ceremony, organized and led by Tom Toole, a retired Air Force Colonel of Sag Harbor, began with proclamation by Suffolk County Executive Steve Levy, who was joined by Congressman Tim Bishop, Sag Harbor Mayor Greg Ferraris, and North Haven Mayor Laura Nolan.

Ferraris told of how he had accompanied the Haerter family when they brought their son's body home to Sag Harbor. "We met the plane in New Jersey, and I witnessed patriotism like I've never seen before," he said. "Jordan was truly a hero, and an asset to our village."

At a grassy spot near the bridge and wharf, Jordan Haerter was also honored with a tall, granite obelisk memorial monument, unveiled by his parents, Christian Haerter and JoAnn Lyles, of Sag Harbor.

"There was nothing my son loved more than spending time here at the harbor, on this wharf," said Christian Haerter. "We are so appreciative that the whole village raised money for this monument."

"I admire my son's discipline and courage. I know he found his direction," said his mother, JoAnn Lyles, of her only child. "I am now a gold star mother, which is not a club anyone wants to join, but the support of this close-knit community keeps me going." Lyles added that her son's cousin Jessica still maintains his web page to keep his memory alive.

A 2006 graduate of Pierson High School in Sag Harbor, Haerter was described as "a responsible and serious student" by his grandmother, Lilly Haerter. She said that, at age 16, Jordan took flying lessons at East Hampton Airport, and learned to fly solo before he got his driver's license. "As a child he always dressed as a soldier for Halloween, and he loved wearing a uniform," said his grandmother.

His grandfather, John Lyles, of South Carolina, said Haerter's long-term goal was to join the Sag Harbor Police. "At his funeral service, the Sag Harbor Police and Southampton Town Police made him an honorary member of their forces, giving him badges," he said. "But he never had a chance to live that dream, since he enlisted in the Marines right out of high school. After his boot camp training, he was only in Iraq one month when he was killed. But now he will never be forgotten in his hometown of Sag Harbor."

On the day before her son died, JoAnn Lyles received a letter from him, saying he was confident he had made the right choice, and he only worried about her.

Deep Water: FEMA Rejiggers Flood Map

By Susan Galardi

Just when it seemed things couldn't get worse (well, not exactly), there's more bad news for some beleaguered property owners who live in the depreciating asset we call home. As most East Hamptonites brace themselves for increased property taxes to contribute to the town's haggard economy, about 150 additional residents of East Hampton Village and Sagaponack will have to shell it out for flood insurance as a result of new flood hazard maps issued by the Federal Emergency Management Agency (FEMA). The new maps, known as DFIRMs (Digital Flood Insurance Rate Maps) show areas prone to flooding during storms, changes in drainage patterns and other topographic details.

Based on the new mapping, (the first in 20 years) 15% fewer buildings (about 4,488 structures total) in all of Suffolk have actually been removed from the list of properties in flood zones. Those lucky homeowners may no longer be required to drop the dime on flood insurance, or depending on the change, may be able to pay lower premiums. Almost 500 homes were removed from the flood zone in the Town of Southampton (from 3,579 to 3,104), and about 100 the Town of East Hampton (from 1,632 to 1,512). But in the Villages of Sagaponack and East Hampton, the number of homes in the flood plain more than doubled — from 46 to 119 properties in Sagaponack, and from 60 to 146 in East Hampton Village.

The maps, exhaustive information on flood insurance, engineers and insurance specialists from FEMA were available at a four-hour public meeting last Thursday at the Southampton Cultural Center. Upon entering, you were given a sheet of paper by a welcoming receptionist, who wrote in the address you were investigating. From there, you could meet with a FEMA rep at one of the four "Property Flood Risk ID Stations" at the front, to better understand changes in your designation. If desired, you could then meet with a specialist from the National Flood Insurance Program (NFIP).

I sat with FEMA Senior Engineer Paul Weberg, asking him why new properties were added to the flood maps. "Because of the latest and greatest technology," he said. "The new mapping showed that these areas were lower than what had been shown. The digital maps are accurate to plus/minus six inches."

The new mapping, which will take effect in December, 2009, shows a newly redefined floodplain that outlines specific areas as having high, moderate or low flood risk. A floodplain is defined as a typically dry area where water will pool or flow through during a 100-year storm. The term 100-year storm simply means that the area has a 1% chance of a major storm happening on any given year. According to Weberg, the Hurricane of '38 would be in that storm category.

So what is a homeowner to do if he or she is now in a flood zone? If you have or plan to get a mortgage from a federally backed lender, you are required to have flood insurance. (There's a chance that if those who will be affected lock in rates now, they might be able to avoid higher premiums, at least in the short term. This is definitely a "call your insurance broker" issue.)

Currently in Suffolk, flood insurance from the NFIP is guaranteed up to $250,000. Premiums vary from about $388 for the lowest risk designation to thousands in the highest risk areas. There are umbrella policies available with $250,000 deductibles (meaning you need a NFIP policy for the first $250,000) and additional insurance available above $250K from underwriters like Lloyds of London.

The formal presentation in Southampton, co-sponsored by FEMA, the NYS Department of Environmental Conservation and Suffolk County Fire Rescue Emergency Services, will now be followed by a 90-day comment period (from Nov. 14, 2008 to Feb. 11, 2009). During this time, homeowners can comment, contest and complain — as well as file appeals — on their new rating. According to Weberg, "If homeowners think something is wrong with the FEMA map, they can present that to us. It's always due process." He added that, because of the extensive work done and state of the art technology used, "the chances are pretty slim" that a property would be reclassified based on an appeal. In the meantime, those interested in where their house falls in the flood plain can go to suffolknyflood-maps.com. Plug in your address, and you'll get information, including whether or not you need additional insurance.

Of course, most of the homes added to the list are right on or close to the Atlantic, so one must wonder if a few extra thousand dollars of insurance would matter much to property owners in the estate section. Weberg wondered the same, and he verified a final fact: If you have no mortgage on the property or paid cash for that manse on the beach, you are not required to get a penny of flood insurance. Homeowners who took the chance that their multi-million dollar investments would stand against a raging storm probably weren't relying on that $250K of flood insurance to help them sleep at night on a bed that's a few hundred feet from the ocean. And, after all the research he has reviewed for FEMA and his own scientific expertise, Weberg added, "If money was no object, that's where I'd live. Right on Dune Road."

Pope Holds Lead in SH Recount

As the majority of the country voted Democratic on Nov. 4, so did the Town of Southampton, with Democrat Sally Pope officially besting incumbent Republican Dan Russo for a seat on the Town Board. Russo was appointed to the board last February to fill the shoes of Linda Kabot, who became Town Supervisor.

However, it was a close race, coming down to the absentee ballots. As long as they were post-marked by Nov. 3, those ballots could be received by the Town for tallying until Nov. 12, and in the end, Pope won by several hundred votes — 12,582 to 11,750. Democrat Andrea Schiavoni was also named town justice, defeating incumbent Republican Thomas DeMayo 13,974 to 10,717.

eral public could just walk around through trails and generally enjoy it, preserved land that would now be farmed changes the playing field.

The original "preserve" was not just for the use of the people in the development. But if you allow farming in a preserve, suddenly you don't want outsiders coming in. This may be good for agriculture, but it is bad for the taxpayers. In an "agricultural preserve," for example, the owner of it, if he planted cabbages, might want to build high turkey wire fences to keep the deer out. This is a whole different thing than was originally intended.

In any case, here we are, in Bridgehampton, with a proposal on 13 acres that is a set of plans that says right on it "FARM PLAN."

The plan for the farm consists of rows and rows of flowers, bushes, orchards and shrubs, all for sale to the general public. There is a driveway you come up to get to where you buy your shrubs, a loading area, a parking area for 16 cars, and three new buildings where there are none now — none of which are common farm buildings. One is called a barn, but inside are a storage area and equipment and tool room on the first floor, and an office and conference room on the second floor. Another building is a greenhouse, like you might see at either a garden center or on a farm, and the third is a fake windmill. Not only a fake windmill, but a fake Dutch windmill. As I recall, the Dutch never got farther out from New Amsterdam than the Jamaica Plain and Flushing, while the English settled the East End. Nevertheless, in a land of a dozen beautiful and historic English windmills, they want to build a Dutch one. Whatever.

I should say, incidentally, that from the plans each of these three buildings, plus a fourth equipment shed, would, if built, be really stunning and beautiful 19th century reproductions. And I should also say that the pathways through the proposed "flower farm," (garden center), are as lovely as pathways through an English garden. Nevertheless, this is a residential neighborhood. And it's a long way from a farm stand on the street in front of a field of vegetables and flowers behind.

Today, this would not be a legal project in East Hampton Town. It would not even be a legal project in Southampton Town. But things have changed. And now the town wants to encourage farming in ways nobody thought of before.

I can give you lots of examples of the lengths that Southampton Town went to in the past to keep open space as open space and to strictly enforce farming as a wholesale-only business.

A big hew and cry went up years ago when Jeff White, in Sagaponack, built a greenhouse on his farm as a place to sell plants and flowers at retail. It is still there today — it is Liberty Farms on Sagg Main — but it was quite a battle before White, the farmer, finally prevailed.

One who did not prevail was Tony Tiska, who owned a big potato farm at the corner of Scuttlehole Road and Millstone in Bridgehampton. Tiska opted for the plan where you sell your development rights to the town, but then got in trouble when he leased some of his farmland to a polo club and then the polo club built stables on the leased land to house their polo ponies. The polo people put forward the somewhat lame argument that these stables were to "raise" polo ponies. But, of course, they were just keeping them there between matches and until it was time to send them back to Argentina. In the end, the stables had to be removed. And the polo club moved their operation to the Entenman Farm in Calverton.

Then there was the regulating of farm stands. The town saw, correctly, that a farm stand is a retail business. And though they wanted to encourage them, they didn't want to make farmers markets out of residential streets. Rather ridiculous, but I guess necessary, laws were passed about farm stands. It could only be a certain number of square feet. At least 70% of everything being sold had to be raised in the field behind the farm stand — not the field down the block, but behind the farm stand. And the other 30% had to be accessory stuff to what was being raised. If you raised corn, you could sell corn fritters, or cornbread. And finally, the whole thing had to be temporary enough to be removed at the end of every summer season.

Particularly interesting is the fact that, although in the old days developers were perfectly content to set aside a natural "preserve"

Rider miles this week: 71,545

DOWN IN THE TUBE

Paris and Nicki Hilton were seen on the Southampton platform last weekend, probably out here visiting mom and dad. Barack Obama was secretly out here with his wife and kids, surrounded by secret service men, with both the front and back of the car cleared of people as they went from Westhampton Beach and a meeting with Rabbi Schneier to a confab with the Furmans at their home near the Sag Harbor stop. But don't tell anybody.

THE BUM CAR

Hampton Subway inaugurates this week the new "bum" car, where people without any money to pay at the turnstiles could ride the subway anyway in this shabbily configured car at the back end of each subway train.

The car will have no seats, but you will be able to sit on hay bales in it. Also, be aware that the maintenance on this car will take place just once every three months, so it might smell badly during its last two weeks. (Dates of maintenance will be handwritten on a list on the inside of the car wall as required by law.) Also there's no supervision on the car, so you are on your own. Also, on this car, we are shutting off the loud speaker, so you won't be able to tell what station the train is about to stop at. Other than all that, it should be just as good as any of our other cars. And it adds a new dimension to the service we offer. No other subway in the country offers this service, says our commissioner Bill Aspinall. It's a plus.

SUITCASE STILL LOST

The suitcase filled with a quarter million dollars in $1,000 bills that a man said two weeks ago was accidentally left on a seat on the Southampton to Water Mill run is still missing. Anyone finding it please call Arlen Bangsten at Goldman Sachs in New York City. There will be no questions asked.

COMMISSIONER ASPINALL'S MESSAGE

Due to the downturn in the national economy, fewer riders seem to be able to afford to get through the turnstiles at our regular prices these days. As a result, revenue for the subway is down and we are forced to take some unhappy measures. This week, we are announcing a layoff of 842 people, which is a little over half our staff. We are appealing to riders to volunteer for these posts, so we don't have to lay off any more people. We are particularly interested in finding people who have the skills to drive subway trains. Our motormen were the most highly paid of our employees and so they are the first to go.

You should know that I, personally, am going to lead the way in these layoffs. I am going to sign each and every one of the 842 pink slips myself, and not only sign them, but write a warm, personal note and, if possible, shed a tear. All these people, we know, will surely be missed by the few rest of us that remain.

As for my salary, if it weren't for the fact that the subway system cannot possibly get along without me, I would be laying myself off too, you may be sure. As it is, I have been asked by myself and have agreed to take a 3% across the board cut in my salary. We all have to do our part.

HONORING THE ARTIST: CUCA ROMLEY

While Cuca Romley's cover this week reflects a narrow view of Sag Harbor as seen from her gallery, The Winter Tree, the artist herself enjoys a much wider perspective regarding her personal and professional pursuits. Consider, for example, her far-ranging background in art and advertising and her life in Spain, Paris and New York. While the cover also shows Sag Harbor at sunset, there's no doubt that Romley's thirst for life is endless.

Q: When we left off during our last conversation, you were "mother" to several cats in addition to being a real mother to your daughter who will be visiting you this December.

A: Yes, she's coming from San Francisco. We have always gotten together at Christmas for all our lives, no matter where we are living. Sometimes I would send my daughter on the plane when she was younger to visit my mother who lived in Monte Carlo.

Q: Nowadays, children live all over the world, so far away from their parents.

A: You make your children independent; I passed on genetic independence to my daughter. They belong to another generation with no limitations. With the internet and phones, children lose their sense of distance because they can be in touch with their family even if not directly.

Q: That's a good point. How about your cats? They are a family to you, too.

A: Yes. You can compare animals to a human family. The cats I feed from the neighborhood have family problems. The male cat doesn't come anymore to be fed. I think his mother doesn't want him.

Q: Now that winter is coming, what's a typical day like for you?

A: I'm a working maniac. I paint all day, because it's a necessity and because I like it. I do larger canvases, like "Venus," which I'm working on now. Classical mythology is so beautiful. I also have a classical background in art.

Q: Yet your signature paintings are in the naïve style. How does that work?

A: Art is not limited. Most of the time I paint what I know, like local scenes of Sag Harbor, in a naïve style. That doesn't mean it's my dream. I love classical subjects; Greek mythology is timeless.

Q: What do you think about current contemporary art?

A: I was born in the wrong century. We limit art to marketing and fads now. The art in this century will be remembered by technology, science and greed.

Q: You had classical art training so I understand your feelings.

A: I went to the Beaux Arts in Paris to study classical painting, but I went into advertising because I didn't want to be a starving artist in Paris with no water and heat. I had worked in advertising in Spain and Italy, too. When I moved to New York, I also was in the field, doing catalogues for Danskin. But that wasn't what I wanted to do.

Q: So you went from sophisticated art in fashion to naïve painting. What a leap. How did that happen?

A: I liked early American painting so that was one influence. There are no rules in naïve painting; there's more freedom unlike classical and fashion styles. I like challenges.

— Marion Wolberg Weiss

Ms. Romley's work is on view at her Sag Harbor Gallery, The Winter Tree, and in December at New York's Gina Gallery (82nd and Columbus Ave.).

What?

because it enhanced the value of the home sites that abutted it, now, in addition to that, they get a "gift" of being able to run a business on this preserve and even buy and sell the preserves if what goes on there is lucrative.

A recent example, already approved, is a 13-house development on a 30-acre former farm in East Quogue.

The developer bought the property, which is not preserved, and proposed building 13 houses on the 30 acres, each on a parcel of two-and-a-half acres. But the town asked the developer to cluster the houses, and leave a large parcel as open space.

So the developer came back with a plan to build 13 houses, each on one acre, with the rest of the property, 17 acres, as open space.

The town approved it and in the old days it would have ended there. But today, under the new rules, the town then gave the developer a gift — the right to own and "farm" the open space.

And not only that, but also, if the "farm" was lucrative, to sell the property to somebody else.

We've got all sorts of "farms" these days: You can drive up the New York Thruway and as you pass through Westchester, turn off and stop at Stew Leonard's, a "farm" that is in reality just a giant shopping center, complete with hay bales and occasional banjo players and people dressed up as farm animals for the kiddies.

We've got Pumpkintown every autumn on the Montauk Highway in Southampton, with slides, jungle gyms, tame penned farm animals and wooden pirate ships you can climb around on.

And we've got real farms with cows and orchards and farm stands, where you can buy tickets to go through corn mazes.

And now, maybe we'll get a garden center on land that, for the last 10 years, neighbors have looked out to see tractors plowing it to plant potatoes, about to become an English garden center with a Dutch windmill.

neat, with splendid mirrors and washbasins. You never saw a stall in those movies. And for the most part, these ladies' rooms were in restaurants where, first, one of the women would go to "wash up" and then a second woman would follow to talk about what was and wasn't going on between them and the men who had taken them out to dinner.

The men's rooms, by contrast, were a combination of filth, bad smells and graffiti marked on stalls, sometimes both inside and out. Sometimes they were in pen. Sometimes they had been scratched through the paint. They'd be about a particular woman, or a statement of intentions about women in general, or some insult or degrading remark aimed at Tony or Fred or somebody. All would be accompanied by very bad line drawings, usually of human genitalia in various states of arousal. They were indeed worthy of a senior thesis. Indeed, since my teacher was a woman, I thought this academic exercise would knock her socks off, since it would be about something she had never seen before. Of course, I did edit the work. No sense getting myself in trouble over this.

You have no idea how impossibly shameful it would be for me as a man to walk into a ladies' room back then. It might happen by accident. Women would scream. I'd rush out. Sorry, sorry.

Men at that time put their women up on pedestals. They were princesses and queens. They couldn't run or throw. Or if they did, it was "like a girl." We needed to protect them. Lift heavy things for them. Hold the doors open for them. Make sure everything was okay with them. None of my friends were even sure, at least up until we personally found out, usually in the back seat of a car, if women did what we did in bathrooms or even how they might do that.

At dances or sports events, you'd see long lines of women waiting to use the ladies' room when the event was over. We men just went in and out. Whatever it was they did in there took time. We did know they could not use urinals. We knew that much.

The change in the bathroom situations in public places came almost unnoticed as times changed.

It began when the powers that be — men — began to take seriously the claim by women that when architects designed buildings, they made the same number of places for women to go to the bathroom as men. And it wasn't fair, given that they took longer.

Newer buildings do have more places for women to go, I believe, but it remains true that the vast majority of buildings are from an earlier time — including Danny's Poxabogue Café — which still has the same men's room and ladies' room signs out front that they did 50 years ago.

Today, you see lots of places that make no distinction whatsoever between the sexes. Where new restaurants come in and take over a place where the plumbing allowed one toilet in the men's room and one toilet in the women's room and lock the door, the owners simply changed the rules about who could use them. All are marked WC for water closet. Go in, use it, leave.

This seems to say, well, we are all family, we are all friends, we are all one. Let's all treat each other that way.

As for the rest, there has now become a common rule that if the bathroom of your sex is in use, you can try the bathroom of the other sex if you can't wait and if it's free. Total strangers are asked to serve as lookouts. And they do. Even if it's a woman and a man going in. It works fine.

And the filthy public bathrooms of yore are gone. And the graffiti is gone.

Personally, I think that some men, maybe of the older generation like me, thought that if our men's rooms were going to sometimes be used by women, then by god, we ought to make them nice for them.

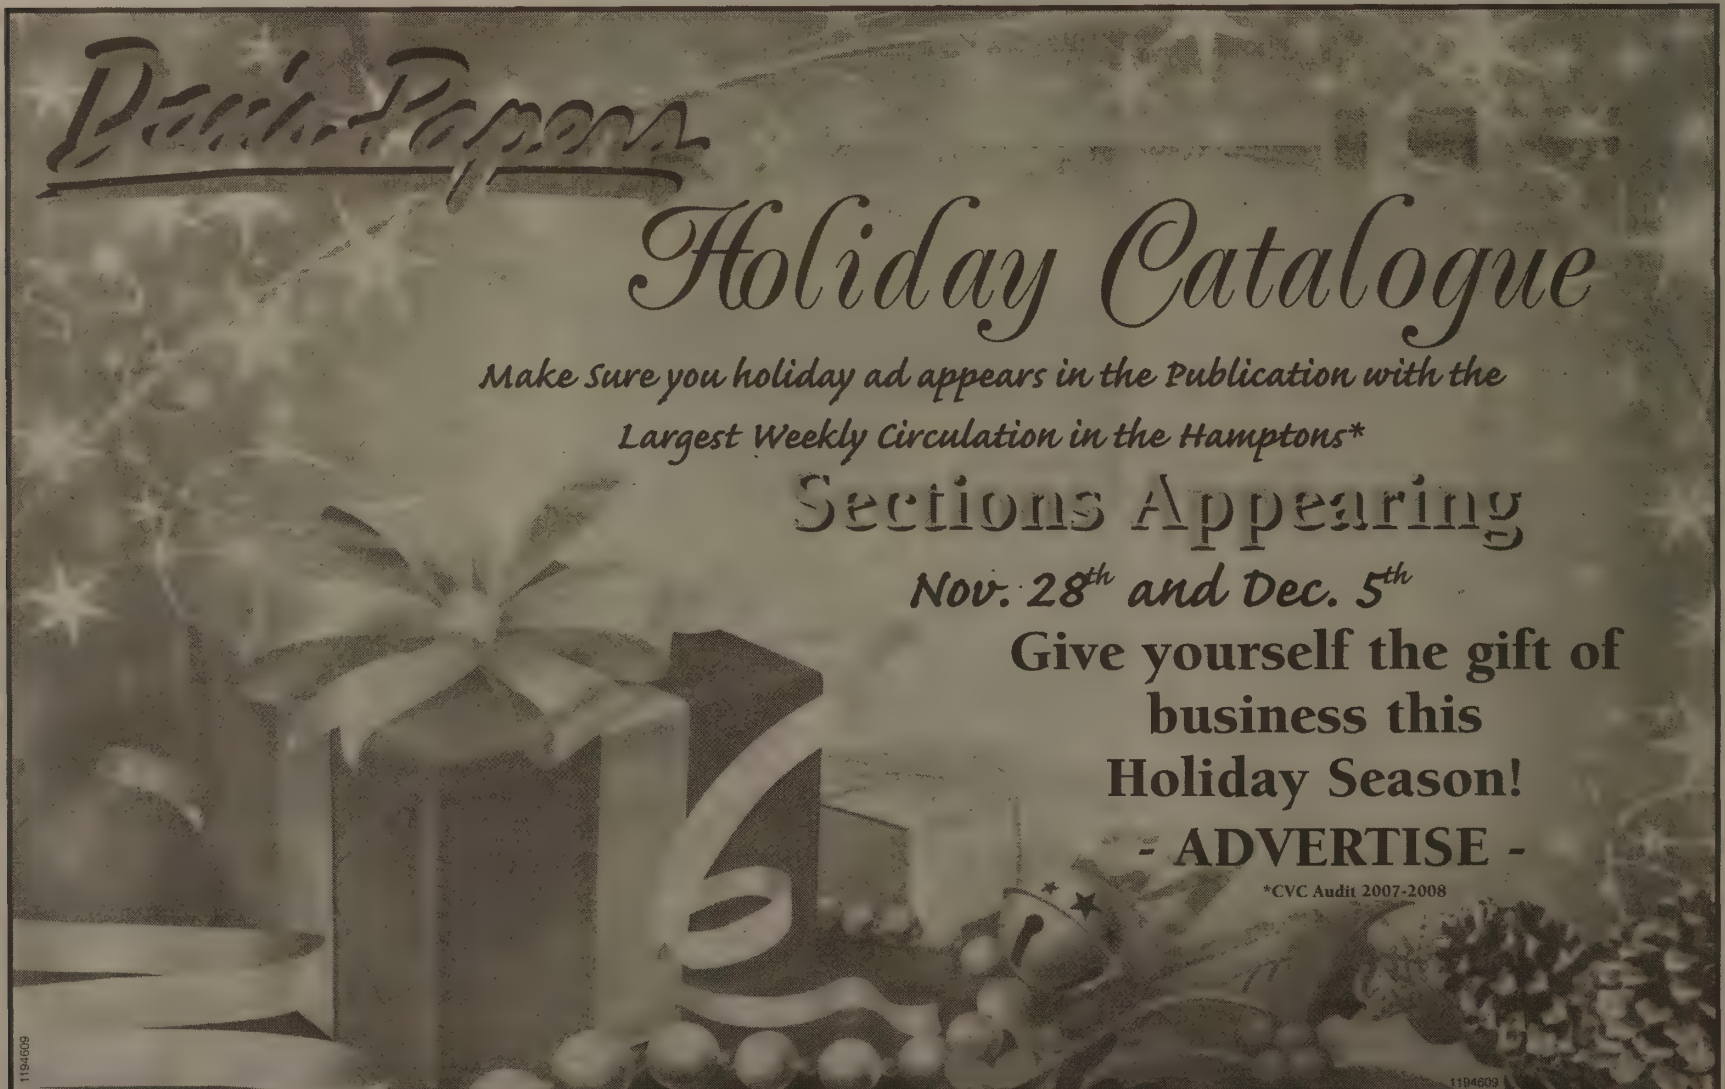

It's uplifted the whole experience. It's good for us men, too. And, of course, it's just much better sanitation and health.

I don't even miss the graffiti.

Tweed's Restaurant & Bison Bar

17 East Main Street, Riverhead, 631-208-3151

Now enjoying its eighth year of business, Tweed's is truly a restaurant for all seasons but in many ways it really comes into its own in the Fall. On a chill, somewhat damp evening, there is that immediate sense of welcome and warmth as you enter. This has always been a charmingly decorated dining room but now with new banquette seating stretching the length of the room, soft lighting everywhere and pleasant background music, it is even more elegant, and the enormous bison head continues to 'smile' down over the great long bar. Read the story of the bison posted under it. This truly was an historic beast - one can only hope it appreciated being shot by Teddy Roosevelt

As we enjoyed some of that great bread that Tomcat

Bakeries supplies, we studied the menu with interest because it had been quite a while since we had last eaten here. Executive Chef Jeff Trujillo remains one of the most enthusiastic chefs you will ever meet and with the extensive use of bison meat in appetizers and main courses, the menu proved to be very interesting and promised some delicious tastes. Owners, Ed Tuccio and Dee Muma own a large bison farm on the outskirts of Riverhead and some of the meat comes from their animals.

We started fairly conservatively with some perfectly cooked jumbo shrimp served with Jeff's special guacamole that was very delicate but full of flavor. Then we had to try something new to us both. Smoked goose breast is a rarity and it turned out to be well worth trying, very tender and with subtle tastes and this is something that is really worth choosing if it is on the menu.

We always love good soup and the pumpkin bisque showed light creamy tastes without any hint of heaviness or cloying. The mix of pumpkin and spices was exquisite again this should be a definite choice if you love good soup.

For our main courses Stella chose the Peconic Bay scallops that were incredibly sweet and you can only long for the day when the bay is once again full of these delicacies that rival anything you will ever taste. Jeff's presentation did them full justice in never swamping their delicacy. I chose the bison hanger steak because hanger steak is great but it is also one of the most demanding cuts to prepare because the meat has to be just right and the cooking can easily mar it and make the steak very chewy. Now with bison meat you really have to leave yourself in the chef's hands. Forget what level of 'doneness' you choose with beef. Bison has such low fat that it is only too easy to overcook it - so leave it to the chef as I did and then enjoy the depth of tastes and the textures and the beautiful wild mushroom cream sauce that accompanied it. Both dishes came with a nice selection of fall vegetables, broccoli, cauliflower and Brussels sprouts. These were impeccably fresh but were a little too al dente even for us who love al dente vegetables.

For our dessert we shared a very good Key lime pie that had the right degree of tanginess. Jeff told us that pumpkin pie and a flourless chocolate cake should soon be on the menu to complement the already good, if somewhat conventional, choices.

Tweed's has a good selection of wines both from Long Island and further a field, and wines by the glass are from $9 to $12 and from $28 by the bottle. Appetizers are from $11 to $15; main courses from $23 to $41.

Tweed's also has a sister operation named Dark Horse Catering (631-745-6769) where Jeff employs his culinary skills for offsite catering of all sizes and descriptions.

Tweed's has developed a definite personality as a restaurant where the warm, comfortable elegant surroundings are more than matched by the quality of the food which is now a match for any other top kitchen on Long Islands and has the special qualities of offering the best of some wonderful bison meat and that great huge bison head that will still be smiling down as you contentedly finish your meal.

Life Style

Beauty/Fashion

Fashionista By Kelly Krieger

Stylin' in the Rain (or Snow...)

When it rains, it pours, and most people are not prepared for the unexpected. In fact, I find myself always digging for my umbrella, proper footwear and raincoat every time. Rain gear is essential in any wardrobe collection. Rainwear not only protects us from the ugly outdoor elements, but it also protects our clothing, shoes, accessories and, of course, our hair.

Over the past few seasons, rain boots have become a fashion statement. Bright colors, bold patterns and prints have replaced those old galoshes. Chanel, Gucci, Tory Burch, Marc Jacobs, Michael Kors and Burberry are among the top designers to cash in on those rainy days.

Who said we can't look fashionable in rain and all-weather gear? There are many hot picks. The following are a few trendy selections I found while browsing the internet: Chooka Printed Rain Boot (designed with an adjustable buckle, removable insole, one-inch rubber heel and upper cotton lining, priced at $59.95 and available at nordstroms.com); the very popular Ed Hardy "Raine" Rain Boots (available also at Nordstrom's in an assortment of patterns and impressive colors; prices average around $104.95), Kate Spade "Russel" Rain Boot (priced at $125 and available in white with black design; log on to katespade.com for her full collection of footwear and outerwear pieces) and Burberry's Rain Boot (a very fashionable black heel boot, priced at $350 and made in Italy.)

Saks Fifth Avenue (with a store in Southampton) offers an array of chic rain boots and raincoats. On their Web site, you'll find many offerings such as: Aquatalia Marvin K "Wasabi 3" Weatherproof Rain Boots (with an elastic goring upper shaft, breathable lining and padded foot bed, priced at $285 and made in Italy); Kors by Michael Kors Wedge Rain Boots (with a comfortable wedge heel and adjustable buckle, available in black and priced at $120); Marc by Marc Jacobs Multi Heart Rain Boot (with a stacked heel, pull on design, available in a blue/black or pink/black pattern and priced at $225); and finally Moncler's Tall Bubble Boot (this all-weather rain boot is available in red, caramel and black, priced at $500 and made in Italy.)

As for the "old" rain/trench coat, there are a plethora of options. Among the standouts: Burberry's Metallic Check Trench coat (fully lined and lightweight, priced at $1,250 and available at many of the high-end department stores or log on to burberry.com); Jane Post for Saks (A-line swing slicker, priced at $375); and Patagonia Shadow Trench Coat (priced at $225).

Umbrella anyone? Where is my umbrella? I can't remember how many umbrellas I've bought and lost over the years. Whether you prefer an inexpensive foldable version or top-of-the-line designer piece, you must have at least one dependable umbrella. Check out signaturebella.com for a collection of stylish women's umbrellas available in every color of the rainbow or aspinalooflondon.com for the most elegant choices and designs.

Injectibles and the Fight Against Aging!

Dr. Paul Kelly MD, FACS is certified by the American Board of Facial Plastic and Reconstructive Surgery and the American Board of Otolaryngology. He has his Doctorate from Tulane and did his fellowship in Facial Plastic and Reconstructive Surgery.

Dr. PAUL KELLY
MD, FACS

"One of the most valuable tools I use in fighting the aging process are the injectables". They can help correct problems such as folds around the mouth or lines around the lips. Some treat fine lines and wrinkles around the eyes and can provide volume. As a rule, BOTOX® is used for the upper face and fillers such as collagen, Restylane® or Juvederm® or long lasting fillers such as Radiesse® and Sculptra® are used from the lower eye to the chin. The correct injection will soften skin wrinkles and still allow some motion, creating a relaxed appearance. These products vary in permanency and best locations for use.

Once you've done your home-work on available "injectables" for the area you wish to correct, it is time to choose a doctor or as we refer to in the profession, the "injector". Choose one, who talks with you about natural results and a balanced injection. These are key words or phrases that should be heard during the consultation, which are usually offered free by most plastic surgeons.

During the initial consultation with my patients, I also help them choose what is best for their face to address their areas of concern. Right now and until the end of December, in addition to the free consultation I am also giving 10% off the price of any "injectable" as my Holiday gift to my patients (just clip and bring in the coupon).

Chicken Soup for the Cold

By Maria Orlando Pietromonaco

You're not going to like this, but I'm going to fill you in on a bit of harsh reality: There is NO cure for the common cold. Hard to believe, right? They transplant hearts, remove brain tumors, make bionic limbs – but they cannot annihilate the good-old, everyday, irksome (sometimes downright miserable) cold.

Okay, there's the bad news. The good news is that we can try and prevent getting a cold in the first place, and we can try and treat the symptoms of a cold if we succumb to the beast.

Prevention. Since it's not possible to cure a cold, let's talk about the ways in which to dodge the villain. First of all, many people think that you can catch a cold from being cold, or being wet and cold. This is not true. The common cold is a virus; the cold air in and of itself cannot infect you with the cold virus (there are 200 strains of the cold virus, and any one of them could cause the two to four colds that each adult is expected to get within a given year).

What being cold can do, however, is lower your resistance to the cold bug, so while your body is fighting to stay warm, it is slowly losing the battle against the cold virus. So staying warm and dry can, in effect, help fight off a cold.

Maintaining a healthy and strong immune system is vital. Getting enough rest, managing your stress (notice I didn't say reduce your stress, I said manage it!), eating your fruits and veggies and staying hydrated will keep your immune system ready to ward off any cold critters that are crawling your way.

If you can avoid the cold buggers altogether, that would be a great benefit. Do you know how cold germs get into your system? Through your eyes and nose. So try and refrain from touch or rubbing your eyes, especially when you are out in public and you've come in contact with infected surfaces. Also, try and stay clear of your office mate who is sneezing infected particles into the air. Washing your hands often is crucial as well, as all day long we are touching things that have germs left behind by afflicted individuals. If you cannot get to soap and a sink, use a hand sanitizer that has at least 60% alcohol. Carrying one around in your car or on your person from now on would be a good idea.

Treatment. Okay – so you've been defeated. You felt it coming on and now you've got a full-blown cold. Because it is a virus, antibiotics are completely useless. The only thing that is sure to rid a cold is Father Time. You have to ride out a cold virus, but you can make yourself more comfortable and possibly speed up the recovery with some natural, home-grown remedies.

Drink lots of fluids: Although you can't drown out a cold, liquids (like water, tea, juice, and broth) can loosen congestion and prevent dehydration due to mucous production (I know – but it had to be said).

Chicken soup: Believe it or not, mama's remedy may actually have some validity. Some studies suggest that chicken soup may act as an anti-inflammatory and also helps move mucous through the body (I know – but I had to say it again. Last time, promise).

Vitamin C: There are many conflicting studies about whether or not Vitamin C helps fight a cold, and if it does, how much is needed to do that. According to the Mayo Clinic, taking an extra 200 mg a day when you feel a cold coming on can't hurt, and several studies have shown that it does have beneficial effects.

Zinc: Same deal as Vitamin C. Many studies show that there is no conclusive evidence that zinc has cold-fighting abilities. However, there are a few studies that show promising results from zinc taken in a lozenge form.

Echinacea: Many alternative medicine gurus, including Dr. Andrew Weil, are proponents of echinacea to help shorten the duration of a cold (or even prevent it in the first place). Taking a supplement in the recommended dosage allowed by the manufacturer has no ill effects, according to many physicians, but the jury is still out on this one as far as its effectiveness.

Foods with cold fighting abilities: There are many foods that have powerful antioxidants that can improve overall health. Garlic, herbs like ginger and chamomile, green and black teas and many fruits and vegetables are extraordinary for the immune system and cell health. It can only help you to add these to your diet when you are enduring a cold (it would be a good idea to stick with it for the rest of the season, even when you are feeling well!).

Humidifiers and saline nasal sprays can help relieve congestion and stuffiness. Many doctors agree that over-the-counter decongestants and cough medicines may help reduce the severity of the symptoms somewhat, but they heed warnings about dosage, duration of use and possible negative side effects.

The moral of the story: Stay clean, disinfected, healthy, rested, hydrated and far away from cold-afflicted individuals if possible. Catching a cold at some point in the season is probably inevitable, but you can try to reduce the number of times you get one and the duration of the cold as well. But once you do feel those maddening symptoms infiltrating your nose, head, chest and throat, hold on to your tissues and ride out the storm.

TAKE A HIKE By Ken Kindler

Hither Hills (4 or 7 miles)

A few months ago, I met Rollo Sicoco on a hike and learned about his new hiking group. It's a web-based meet-up group called Long Island Trail Enthusiasts (LITE) longislandtrailenthusiasts.com. According to Rollo, "LITE is a group of Long Islanders and friends who share a passion for trails and nature. The group explores the many trails and beautiful natural sites Long Island has to offer. We also travel, camp, backpack and hike to many beautiful places in the mountains of the Northeast and beyond." One of the features I like about the LITE Web site is the many photographs posted there.

Recently, East Hampton Trails Preservation Society and LITE collaborated to schedule a hike in Hither Hills. The listing read as follows: "This basically flat, dual-distance hike at a moderate pace features beautiful woodlands and great water views. Hikers electing the shorter route will visit Waterfence and Fresh Pond, while others will continue on the seven-mile route that will include Goff Point, Walking Dunes, and Nominicks. Meet at the Hither Hills Overlook in Montauk on Rt. 27, about one mile east of the split with Old Montauk Hwy."

When I arrived at the Overlook on the morning of the hike, leader Richard Lupoletti and another EHTPS hike leader, Richard Poveromo, were there. They, along with some late arriving hikers, all communicated using cell phones to coordinate the two hikes. I was assigned the sweep position. I walked at the rear of Lupoletti's seven-mile group. It was my job to make sure that we didn't lose any stragglers. From my vantage point, the hike seemed to progress seamlessly. I was aware that we left some hikers at the Waterfence to be picked up for the short hike led by Poveromo. We met that group again near the end of the hike, by the Walking Dunes.

My group entered the trail through a cut in the middle of the guardrail surrounding the parking area. We followed the Parkway Trail east a short distance, then made a left turn and were on the Serpent's Back Trail. A left turn then put us on the Ocean View Trail. After a half-mile walk, a left onto Old North Road took us to Fresh Pond Landing Road. After turning right onto this wide, sandy road, we followed it across the Old Tar Road and across the railroad tracks. Just before reaching the Napeague Bay beachfront, we turned right up a short slope marked with the white rectangles of the Paumanok Path; then a quick left took us to the Waterfence Overlook, with its beautiful views of shoreline and bluff. Three hundred years ago, when livestock was a major industry in Montauk, there was a split rail fence built here to keep the cattle from returning west. Now in its place, you'll see a fence of poles, with a net, running out into the bay. It is used to trap fish.

Next, after walking down Fresh Pond Landing Road, to the shoreline, we walked west about a mile and three quarters towards Goff Point. William Mulvihill in his book, South Fork Place Names, explains that this point "on the eastern outlet of Napeague Harbor to Gardiner's Bay, is named for William Goff, an English judge who had condemned Charles I of England to death and had fled to the new world to save his own head. Tradition has it that he landed in this area, then left for New England."

Just before reaching Goff Point, we cut across to the harbor side of the isthmus and followed the (State Parks-constructed) Walking Dune Trail in reverse to its trailhead on Napeague Harbor Road. We walked up this road to where the white-painted rectangles of the Paumanok Path crosses it and turned left. According to William Wallace Tooker, the 19th-century expert on Algonquian Indian languages, the term Paumanok originally applied only to eastern Long Island and it meant "land of tribute." This was because the Montaukett were forced to pay tribute first to the powerful Pequots of southern New England, and later to the white settlers. We followed the trail a short distance and took a well-defined detour to our right, out to a vantage point on the Nominicks (Montaukett for land that is seen from afar) where the hills of the moraine rise from Napeague. We then followed the Stephen Talkhouse portion of the Paumanok Path east to an intersection, where we continued straight, leaving the Paumanok Path to cross the railroad tracks. We crossed over Old Tar Road to Elisha's Valley Trail. We took a quick right onto North Trail, and a left onto the Petticoat Hill Trail, and then followed a recent reroute back to the scenic overlook.

Preserving Beauty with Holiday Leaf Placemats

Susan Galardi

When I was a kid we used to collect leaves in the fall. Sometimes I simply gathered up the prettiest ones that fell and made them into a little bouquet, but one year Ted Hill, my neighbor, won the largest leaf contest at school with an enormous 12-inch specimen that he searched for far and wide in the woods. I've always loved the idea of bringing the gorgeous autumn colors indoors for holiday décor, and this year, for my niece and nephew, I plan to use leaves to make placemats that will not only keep some of my fondest fall memories and present colorful beauty alive a little longer, but will also entertain the little ones.

I remember a walk that I took one day with Ted's family. We jumped from rock to rock to cross the river by the old mill ruins and hiked through the woods to visit what they called the yellow tree one brilliant sunny fall day. When we got there, we all stood under the canopy and looked up in wonder at the golden yellow glow of an enormous, ancient sugar maple. The butter colored leaves illuminated by the afternoon sunshine seemed to cast light all around us. Since then, I have been entranced by fall color and am always trying to find a way to preserve it and use leaves and seed pods to decorate for the holidays. So, one old-fashioned craft project may be just the way to decorate the kid's section of the Thanksgiving table this year.

One strategy for preserving beauty is to collect all the autumn leaves you can find – they're so beautiful it's more a treasure hunt than a leaf gathering. Maples like Acer aconitifolium can range from pale yellow to deep red, sometimes in the same leaf. Pears are purple fading down to gold, with red and orange in between. Golden yellow witch hazels have large oval leaves that can offset the petite vermillion foliage of burning bush. Oaks are peachy bronze. Sassafras has a range of deep oranges and sweet gums are burgundy and purple. Once you have a good collection start to sort them for color size and shape. If it takes you a couple of walks around the block, or a few hikes around the town to do this, keep your prized specimens outdoors – bringing them in will only hasten their decline. The colors will fade to brown, edges will get crisp and, in general, they will begin to dry out and lose the beauty that you were drawn to in the first place.

The simplest way to preserve them is to iron an arrangement of leaves between two sheets of wax paper. Simply lay out your favorite foliage on an 18-inch long sheet of wax paper. But make sure to have a dishtowel under the bottom piece of wax paper or it may stick to the ironing board. Take a few minutes to play around with the shapes and colors, making sure to leave a bit of wax paper around each specimen so that when you iron the top sheet on, the two pieces seal around the leaf. If you overlap the leaves too much then they will just slide around inside a wax paper envelope.

Lay the next sheet of wax paper over the entire ensemble and gently iron at a low heat making sure to use the nose of the iron to get around some of the deeply cut edges of the leaves so that they are sealed in place. If you aren't happy with the result you can pull the wax paper sheets apart and try again, being careful not to rip the leaves as you separate the layers. Or if you are in love with your new dinner table décor, you can outline the edges in red masking tape for the final finishing touch to your Thanksgiving placemats. Floating a few leaves in a shallow bowl with floating candles can complement the kids' tableware project.

Admittedly some of the color is lost when the leaves are covered up by the wax paper. Gluing the leaves and then laminating them may keep the brilliant hues more intact. But again the question of drying out arises if you don't get down to the print shop in time to get this done. Adding one more step to the process may be too much amid the hectic holiday preparations, and perhaps being a part of the entire process will be more important to the kids.

Finally, there's bad news, good news and more good news. First the bad news: these placemats don't last long – maybe a few days. But once they've passed their prime, they're completely compostable! More good news? You can do it all again next year.

Err, A parent By Susan Galardi

Great Shows for the Day After (Thanksgiving, that is)

With Thanksgiving comes family, friends, feasting – and extra time with the kids. On November 28, the Friday following turkey day, while anyone still employed might be out taking advantage of the “first shopping day of Christmas,” a responsible, designated adult can take the kids to one of two great shows on the East End.

The Westhampton Beach Performing Arts Center will present the daddy of them all when it comes to family theater: The Paper Bag Players, a group celebrating its 50th anniversary with the show, “Make A Little Room For Me.” Yes, this group has been actively performing since 1958! More than three million children all over the world have seen the Obie-Award winning Players, and if you weren’t one of them as a kid, now is the time to treat yourself and your little ones.

The Players present outrageously creative and funny shows with songs, dances, jokes, painting on the set, audience participation and ridiculous costumes and scenery made from, yes, paper bags. For this year’s golden anniversary show, the group will do a number of favorites including a bossy bathtub, a breathtaking bicycle race and an elegant paper lady. We saw their show “On Top of Spaghetti” last year at PAC and my partner, our son and I laughed out loud more times than I can count – it’s highly creative work for people of all ages. The show is Friday, Nov. 28, at 3 p.m. at PAC. Tickets are $25, $20, $15. (631) 288-1500 or visit us on the web at whbpac.org.

Also on Friday, at 11 a.m. and 1 p.m., Bay Street Theatre’s KidStreet series is presenting a human version of the rabbit characters Max and Ruby, created by Rosemary Wells and morphed into a very popular animated show on Noggin. For the uninitiated, Ruby is a big sister bunny who tries to be responsible, and Max is her often unintentionally troublemaking little brother. The show at Bay Street is yet another incarnation of the sibling characters, an original musical from Theatreworks USA.

My son, who saw a preview at his school recently, was a Max & Ruby fan at ages 3 and 4. But now that he’s almost 6 and has graduated to Nicktoons and “Jetix,” “Transformers” and “Bakugons,” I wondered if the show would hold his interest.

Well, he said it was a riot and wants to see it again. He described a big blue tarantula that comes out, in addition to a green alien gorilla and electric eel. These creatures are created by Max’s imagination, but materialize as human-sized creatures, which keep the show interesting for the older kids. By all reports, the songs, by Carol Hall, are top notch – Hall received two Drama Desk Awards for her score to the popular Broadway hit The Best Little Whorehouse in Texas – and with a cast of six, it’s a full scale production. Max & Ruby will be performed at Bay Street on Friday, November 28 at 11 a.m. and 1 p.m. Tickets are $12, at baystreet.org. Both Paper Bag and Max & Ruby are geared to geared to 4-8 year olds – but you could easily stretch that by a year or so on either end with no complaints.

Feinstein at WHPAC; Pizzarelli at Bay Street

By Tiffany Razzano

Jazz enthusiasts will have a tough time deciding what to do on Nov. 29, with two renowned artists performing on the East End. Jazz guitarist, vocalist and bandleader, John Pizzarelli will be at Bay Street Theatre in Sag Harbor that day, while Michael Feinstein, a singer and pianist well known for his interpretations of The Great American Songbook, will be heading for the Westhampton Beach Performing Arts Center. Both go on at 8 p.m., so choose wisely, but there is no wrong answer.

At WHPAC, Feinstein, the darling of the top cabarets in New York and nationwide, will present a full concert of his quintessential piano and vocals. Just a few months ago, Feinstein released his latest album The Sinatra Project – his first recorded tribute to a performer. “Sinatra considered himself, first and foremost, to be an interpreter of song,” stated Feinstein in a press release, “and his influence on other entertainers is incalculable. He has become so thoroughly entrenched in the history of American popular song that it is impossible to open your mouth and sing without his influence being part of that.”

Heavily influenced by the Great American Songbook, Feinstein is known for his covers of musicians such as Porter, Cole and Gershwin. He’s dedicated his career to preserving such music and is even a member of The Library of Congress to serve on the National Sound Recording Advisory Board.

At Bay Street, Pizzarelli will perform selections from his new CD With a Song in My Heart, a collection of songs by Richard Rodgers, best known for his musical collaboration with Oscar Hammerstein. Pizzarelli plans to intermix songs from that CD with fan favorites from throughout his career. “I want to get a little bit of everything in there,” he said, noting that he’s performed at Bay Street several times before and loves to make the trip to the East End.

The homage to Rodgers was an outside choice for Pizzarelli, who mulled over options such as another album of originals, or perhaps an album of Johnny Mercer tunes. “But then we made a left turn to Richard Rodgers,” he said. In a press release, Pizzarelli had stated, “A lot of his musicals are being revived right now. South Pacific is at Lincoln Center. Pal Joey is coming soon. There’s a lot of Rodgers in the air. So it was just a matter of picking songs that I liked – things that would be interesting and make a nice package.”

The son of legendary jazz performer Bucky Pizzarelli, John Pizzarelli grew up in New Jersey in a musical household. He developed an interest in jazz at an early age, but dabbled in rock and pop, influences that still show themselves in his career today through his covers of songs by The Beatles, the Beach Boys and James Taylor. And before he knew it, he was following in his father’s footsteps. “This is something I enjoyed doing,” he said. “I didn’t realize I was making a living at it until I was well into it, because it was fun for me.

But it took time to shape what I wanted to be – someone who sang standards in a small setting.” Pizzarelli has released albums of both original songs as well as covers. His vocals are often compared to Nat King Cole.

Pizzarelli is also known for his radio show, Radio Deluxe, which he does with his wife and co-host, Jessica Molaskey, who is also a singer. “We were thrown into it,” he said. “They were trying to bottle what my wife and I did on stage, the banter between songs.” Though they were initially wary of doing it, now they love their show, which features two hours of jazz and real, intimate conversation, as well as a list of guests that has included Regis Philbin, Liza Minelli, Tony Danza and Steve Tyrell. “The charm of the shows is there’s no play list.”

Right before the show, Pizzarelli says he and his wife make a playlist of 15 songs each and choose songs from these. “That’s the beauty of the show. Then we talk about what we like and don’t like. We talk about what we’re making for lunch. We play a record. There’s a charm to it. The beauty is, it’s not programmed.”

Tickets to see Pizzarelli at Bay Street are $75. Prior to the show, he will be a guest on Judy Carmichael’s live radio show, “Jazz Inspired,” which will also be recorded at Bay Street. Tickets for this are $25. For more information, go to baystreet.org. Tickets to see Feinstein cost $140/$120/$100. For more information, go to whbpac.org.

Reviews: 13 and Rock of Ages

Two new musical offerings, 13 and Rock of Ages, may be worth a look, depending upon your motivation. On Broadway, 13 is a smooth coming of age tale for the whole family, but geared to kids that age and performed by an entire cast of enthusiastic teenagers (including the onstage band). The show boasts some catchy tunes and several good performances by the youngsters. As a result of slick marketing and packaging, the kids may already be chomping at the bit to see 13, which could easily be the opening for a serious heart to heart parent/child talk about values, empathy and the effect of our choices.

Not that the book by Dan Elish and Robert Horn is all that deep, but it takes a realistic look at some of the challenges of adolescence, especially peer pressure. The story follows the hero, Evan (Graham Phillips), a 12-year-old New Yorker who is getting ready for a rollicking bar mitzvah party. His plans, however, go up in smoke when his parents get divorced and his mother transports him to Appleton, Indiana. Evan quickly makes friends with Patrice (Allie Trimm), an intelligent young girl whom he later learns is a social outcast at school. In his effort to get the others to like him and come to his bar mitzvah, Evan treats Patrice badly and sucks up to the "in crowd" led by Brett (Eric M. Melsen), an insensitive blonde jock, and Lucy (Elizabeth Egan Gillies), a shrewd cheerleader whose priorities are her own shallow self-interests.

The story feels like a "paint by numbers" picture, with numerous plotlines running off Evan's main conflict. The characters are pretty one-dimensional with the exception Archie (Aaron Simon Gross), who uses crutches due to a degenerative spinal disease. Gross' Archie even gets a duet with Evan, a vaudeville number called "Terminal Illness," that is probably the highlight of the evening.

The songs by Jason Robert Brown, in several styles from reggae to soul and pop, give the evening a lasting appeal; even though his lyrics have an imposed maturity about them that sounds silly for the teenagers. But the juxtaposition when the kids perform them is quite cute and clever. "It Can't Be True" and "A Little More Homework" are two of the more appealing.

Encouraged by director Jeremy Sams, the endearing cast members (13 of whom are making their Broadway debuts), are having the time of their lives. They deliver on-the-mark precision dancing and idol-like vocals with energy to spare.

Just Off-Broadway, on 42nd Street, the new jukebox musical Rock of Age, a campy romantic comedy with cute American Idol's hunk Constantine Maroulis, plays like a hard rock concert. The evening is almost two hours of nonstop music: 1980s pulsating hard rock.

The love story is played against a silly plotline that has German developers ready to bulldoze Los Angeles's Sunset Strip, including the club where the story is set. There are several stereotypical characters that you would find on the concert scene including the rock star, the wannabe star, the girl, and even strippers for added spice. Director Kristin Hanggi manages to get every ingredient just right. Here is a boldly entertaining show that is high on volume as well as silliness.

13 is playing on Broadway at the Bernard B. Jacobs Theatre, 242 West 45th Street between Broadway on Eighth Avenue. For tickets and information on show time call 212-239-6200.

Rock of Ages is playing at New World Stages, 340 West 50th Street between Eighth and Ninth Avenues. For show times and tickets call 212-239-6200.

Art Commentary by Marion Wolberg Weiss

Modern Photography at The Parrish

Most times that we view an art exhibit, we are often moved in some intellectual or emotional way. One thing for sure: We don't expect to become frustrated and angry by the experience, unless that's the aesthetic intention.

Seeing The Parrish Museum's current show, "Modern Photography," is a rare exception. Not only did it leave this critic frustrated and angry, but the other spectators also reported similar reactions. Even a second viewing did not dismiss the disappointment.

Oddly enough, we are not talking about the quality of the photographs, which are extraordinary in many cases. We are talking, instead, about the works' self-conscious arrangement, and most importantly, the attempt to label them. Because there are so many photographs displayed, most pieces are not named individually but organized in groups: The groups are then represented on charts. We must find each photograph on the chart by its shape and placement to discover its name and photographer. Impossible.

Attempting to give the exhibit every break possible on this point, and realizing that yours truly may be partly to blame for needing the charts as identification aids, another thought emerged. Perhaps the concept is that the photographs should be seen as an aesthetic entity, where separate images function as part of the whole.

Image from Parrish's Photography Show

Actually, art critic Andy Grundberg suggested this idea when lecturing about the exhibit at its opening. To be perfectly honest, however, we aren't entirely sure what his thesis was. We think his idea is that no labeling is necessary; instead, pictures should lose their individual natures. Their essences should derive from the relationship with other works on the wall. The challenge then becomes how to organize pictures so they make sense and give clarity to the world. Naturally, we could be really wrong in our interpretation of the exhibit's intention.

All this viewer knows for sure is that the following are some favorite photographs. Forget their relationship with nearby images.

Richard Price's cowboy figure is a hoot and unlike some of his signature works. Richard Avedon's subject is unique, also contradicting his recognizable celebrities. Chuck Close's portraits are always exceptional, his individuals recognizable or not.

Narrative photographs are always intriguing, including Joanne Callis' "Man With Tire" and Ed Ruscha's "Pool Series." Popular culture themes are fascinating as well, like Lou Stoumen's "Times Square" and other neon settings.

Social-political subjects are noteworthy, too, like Danny Lyon's bird's-eye-view of Ramsey Prison and Robert Frank's teenagers posing by a car. (It's curious to note that both photographers also made films.)

And who can forget Berenice Abbot's image of Wall Street and the Stock Exchange? They're still potent after all these years, still more meaningful today than ever, still able to stand by itself without a relational context.

"Modern Photography" will be on view at The Parrish Museum until Nov. 30.

CORRECTION: Rima Mardoyan's show at Guild Hall will be on view until Nov. 30, not Nov. 23 as previously indicated.

Dining and Nightlife

Simple Art of Cooking Silvia Lehrer

To Brine or Not to Brine

In the dining section of The New York Times on Wednesday, November 12, Harold McGee, a renowned authority on the chemistry of food, writes whether to brine or not to brine, a turkey. While McGee agrees that brining gives moisture to chicken or turkey he gave complex reasons with chemical explanations as to why the meat might become even drier. As we know, turkey is a dry meat.

A brine solution is a basic mixture of water, salt and sugar to balance the saltiness, and could include citrus, spices and herbs to add flavor. I believe that brining does provide a moist bird. A caveat however – how much room do you have in your refrigerator for the brined turkey's required overnight stay in a large container? Frequent basting of the bird during roasting can help add moisture, and, to ensure a crisp skin, slide your hand between the skin and the flesh, season, and leave overnight in the fridge on a rack, uncovered. Happy Turkey Day!

TO BRINE THE TURKEY

Start with a fresh or completely thawed bird, if frozen. Salt and water are a must for soaking the turkey. Add herbs to enhance flavor. Can adapt the recipe to your preference.

Brine for a 12-14 pound turkey

2 gallons water
2 cups coarse (kosher) salt
1 cup sugar
Fresh sprigs of parsley, thyme, rosemary and sage
1 tablespoon fennel seeds
1 cinnamon stick
2 large bay leaves

1 tablespoon black peppercorns
1 teaspoon whole allspice
Juice of 1 large lemon

1. Place two gallons of water in a large stockpot, plastic tub or cooler large enough to hold the turkey. Bring to the boil over high heat. Remove from heat and add the remaining ingredients. Stir to mix and let cool completely.

2. Put the turkey in the brine. It should be completely submerged or breast side down in a tub. Cover and refrigerate for 24 hours.

3. Lift the turkey from the tub and discard the brine. Rinse the turkey under cold running water then dry very well with paper towels. Season the turkey as desired and let it come to room temperature before roasting. Follow the recipe of your choice for cooking the turkey.

ROAST TURKEY WITH ROSEMARY, SAGE AND THYME

Infuse the bird under the skin with a savory blend of herbs and baste with the zesty broth.

Serves 10-12

18-20 pound farm-raised turkey
Coarse (kosher) salt and freshly ground pepper
1 tablespoon each fresh minced rosemary, sage and thyme
2 tablespoons fresh lemon juice
1/3 cup extra-virgin olive oil
1 cup fresh or frozen orange juice

1 cup chicken or turkey broth
1/2 cup Grand Marnier or Triple Sec

1. Remove packet of giblets that is inside the turkey, rinse inside and out with cold water and pat dry with paper towels. Slide your hand between the skin and flesh of the bird, being careful not to tear the skin, and season with salt and pepper rubbed over the skin and in the cavity. Tuck wing tips back. Mix herbs with lemon juice and olive oil and spread under and over the turkey skin. For a crisp skin, refrigerate turkey uncovered up to 24 hours.

2. Next day, bring turkey to room temperature about one hour before roasting, set oven rack at lower third. Meanwhile, combine juice, stock and liqueur and set liquid aside to baste turkey while roasting.

3. Preheat oven to 425 degrees. Place turkey breast side up on a rack in a shallow roasting pan. Immediately reduce oven heat to 325 degrees and roast for 12 minutes to the pound. Baste turkey every 30 minutes or so until the bird is golden brown or until an instant meat thermometer registers 160 degrees in the breast. Remove from oven, transfer turkey to a cutting board and allow it to rest about 20 minutes before carving. Cover breast meat with a tent of foil to keep warm. The bird will continue to cook while resting. If juices run pink in the leg and thigh, carve off the parts and return to pan juices in roasting pan. Simmer legs and thighs for a few minutes longer to bring up to temperature or about 165 degrees. Pan juices can be strained and reheated to pour over the turkey after carving.

THREE CHEERS FOR US

Dear Editor:

The 2008 election was historic for many reasons. Most notably for the election of Barack Obama as President of the United States. As the nation faces significant challenges at home and abroad, I wish the new President well.

I also wish to congratulate all of my fellow candidates who were successful in their quest for public office, as well as my good wishes to all those who made the democratic process work by seeking public office this year.

Most importantly, I want to express my humble thanks to the people of the 2nd Assembly District for returning me for an 8th term as their state representative. For those who did not vote for me, I pledge to work even harder next term to earn your trust. I was pleased to see that nearly 1/4 of all the votes I received were on 3rd party lines. This indicates my supporters came from across the political spectrum and reflected my efforts to represent the district in a truly bipartisan fashion.

The hard work of a new term is on the horizon. The challenges are substantial. I look forward to again meeting those challenges on behalf of the people of the 2nd Assembly District.

Fred W. Thiele, Jr.
Member of Assembly

DOING THE NUMBERS

Dear Dan,

A brief note on Bill Sokolin's letter printed November 14, "Sooner The Better."

Facts are stubborn things. Sokolin says, "I checked 10 companies on the stock exchange in the last two months. One - only one - has gone up significantly, Haliburton, Cheney's old company, before he was vice president."

Sokolin, blow your smoke elsewhere.

A two-second check on Yahoo reveals the following for Haliburton's closing prices in the last few months: July 2: 52.94; August 1: 45.73; September 1: 42.74; October 1: 30.32; November 1: 19.79; close Friday November 14: 18.11.

Maybe in Sokolin's wine business going from 53 to 18 is a significant move up, but where I come from that is a 65% loss. Does the truth mean nothing to anybody any more?

William Strizever

Wow. - DR

DEFENDING PATCHOGUE

Dear Dan,

Last weekend's tragedy got me to thinking.

I grew up on Railroad Avenue in Patchogue and, although I moved away for a couple of decades, I now enjoy a somewhat obstructed view of the Patchogue River just a stone's throw away. Patchogue has always been home. It's richly diverse in ethnicity and alive in community spirit. Both my parents were deeply rooted in the village, my dad on the Patchogue Village Police Force and mom taking us to Shorefront Park to swing on the swings, and following their lead, I embraced our town.

While in grade school, I walked to the Patchogue Library on Lake Street all summer long. Its new home on Main Street draws me still. Friendly faces greet and I always run into someone I've not seen in a while.

We could always smell the spice-of-the-day rounding the corner for home at The Lace Mill. It sure was a staple at the west end of town for as long as I can remember. All these years later, the corner of Holbrook Road and Main Street remains alive in progress and I've frequented Ultimate Fitness regularly at 5 a.m. - there's a loyal early a.m. following there, more diverse, friendly and hard working people that cross my path here at home on a regular basis.

South Ocean Avenue Middle School came after eight years at St. Francis. It, too, is richly diverse and welcoming. There were no ice-breaking sessions like we so often have now for our young people. No pre-visit walk through to familiarize myself. I met new people on the first day and quickly built a new routine with people I would end up calling friend.

Throughout my teenage years I spent many Saturdays 'up town' - walking through Swezey's, Blum's and having a slice at Gino's. Vinny and Millie's son has picked up where they left off and it is still my favorite slice.

The milestones of my daughters' lives were memorialized upstairs at the Brickhouse - my closest friends and family gathered for baptisms, communions, and birthdays. They're young women now but always pick the Brickhouse for a dinner out.

George no longer owns Highway Cleaners, but its new owners greet me most Saturdays and after a brief chat, we wish one another a fine weekend, and I move on to my next errand.

Mark, Brian and Larry, my neighbors at The Harbor Crab, exemplify Patchogue, hard working businessmen that care about the community as well as the success of their business - the former facilitates the latter.

Time changes the names and the faces. Diversity continues to grow. Together with the local merchants, my neighbors and I have a great sense of community spirit and belonging. My home is peaceful and welcoming. Three cheers for Patchogue - still home after all these years.

Police Blotter

Ambien

Rober Shiver, 54, a CEO of a security company, crashed his car head-on into another vehicle when he veered onto the other side of the road. It was 2:50 in the afternoon. He was driving his luxury Land Rover and had an open bottle of alcohol in the vehicle. Shiver blew above the legal driving limit of .08 for blood alcohol content. The two occupants of the vehicle that he crashed into had to be cut out of the vehicle on an East Hampton street. The passengers are expected to survive. The man was not charged immediately with a DWI, as blood tests are pending. The man blamed the entire crash on the sleeping pill Ambien, stating that he took two pills.

Another Ambien?

A man in Sag Harbor was caught red handed stealing a flat screen television in the middle of the night. A neighbor saw the man pull up in a van, take the television out of a home that he did not have permission to enter, and then drive off. Police caught up with the man, but did not immediately arrest him for burglary, as they are waiting to hear from the owners of the house to be sure that he was, in fact, stealing. The man blamed the entire incident on taking two Ambien sleeping pills, in the AFTERNOON, and that those pills were responsible for his behavior.

Ambeeceno

A man in Westhampton was charged after witnesses say he beat another man with a tightly rolled up Dan's Papers. Police found the man and put him in handcuffs, but he was not immediately charged, as police are awaiting to see if the fingerprints on the paper matched his prints. The man blamed the entire incident on taking two Ambien sleeping pills and that they were responsible for his behavior at the public park.

It Was Ambien That Did It

A man was spotted in Southamptton holding up liquor stores for cash. Police caught up with the man, who was not immediately arrested because he had knocked out the liquor store owner, who could not point him out to police. The liquor store owner's testimony is pending. The man blamed the entire incident on taking two Ambiens that afternoon, to help with his sleeping, of course.

Parking Ticket

A man in Bridgehampton parked illegally in a handicapped spot. A traffic cop gave him a ticket. The man is fighting the ticket, claiming that his behavior was the result of taking two Ambien pills in the morning, so that he could get better rest.

Ambien Monster?

A large Ambien pill, the product that is designed to help people fall asleep, was spotted walking through the Hamptons smashing store buildings and screaming at the top of its lungs, "Fight the man! Fight the power!" Police confronted the Ambien pill, which resisted arrest by police, and had to be taken down by a taser gun. The Ambien pill has not been charged yet, as police are awaiting a blood test to see if the pill had any Ambien running through it. We sure hope it doesn't get lost at the hospital.
